1.A	001-161, 163-349	09		Parchemin	- a pasteboard and two paper fly leaves are visible in the beginning, a paste board and perhaps one fly leaf is visible in the end; - the reproduction in the VMR appears to be complete, save for the verso of the flyleaf in the end; - f. 273v is empty, it appears to have contained some text that has washed out (palimpsest?) in minuscule writing as, perhaps, also f. 274r; - since the Eusebian apparatus is present, one would assume that an initial quire with the canon tables was originally present; - several folios (batches of 2-3) are missing, resulting in a loss of Matth. 3,12-4,17 (after f. 6); 19,12-20,2 (after f. 58); Luc. 1,76-2,18 (after f. 170); loh. 6,15-35 (after f. 295); 8,6-39 (after f. 303); 9,21-10,3 (after f. 307); - one folio containing the end of the capitula for Mark is missing after f. 98; - f. 274v (end of the Capitula to John) displays traces of a full page decorative frame that could have been the result of an offprint from a Gospel writer miniature originally located on the following recto, but now missing; - on the lower end of f. 178 (parts of) 7 lines have been torn out and were replaced in the 18th c.

2.R	162, 350	12		Parchemin	- two folios have been supplemented, one at the end of the Gospel of Mark and one at the Gospel of John; - for the first folio a palimpsested leaf has been used, see, UC 3.P; - the biblical text on both folios is written by the same hand; - on f. 349v the restaurator retraced about 18 lines that seem to have become hardly legible; - the restaurator may have occasionally also retraced letters on other pages, e.g. f. 275r (beginning of John)

3.P	162	12 ?		Parchemin	- The folio shows clear traces of it containing a liturgical reading list; since the recto appears to have been partially washed off and trimmed such that the list gives the impression of having been prior, one may assume that a leaf from another manuscript has been reused for the supplement; since the hand that has written the biblical text is dated to the 12th c. and provided the liturgical reading list indeed prior, it can not be later, however, it does not appear to be much older either.
